Q: jQuery issues: What should I know to create one? I would love to create a jQuery plugin, but have so much trouble with it. I tried to learn by creating a silly plugin, but I had a hard time. Here is what I've done so far: `(function($){ $.fn.myplugin = function() { //return a default return this.each(function() { this.myplugin ='something'; }); //return HTML return this.each(function() { this.innerHTML ='something else'; }); } })(jQuery); //you can test it $('#div#id').myplugin(); $('#div#id').html();` I tried to create a toggle button with it, but it didnt work, and it only created a toggle button once. I think I have to use a function that decides what to return, but I don't know what should I return. Help?

A: Actually it is actually quite easy to create a JavaScript plugin and then use it easily with jQuery: `(function ($) { var _self = this; _self.foo = function() { alert("bar"); }; })(jQuery);` Now you can call `foo()` on any jQuery object. `_self` is the "this" context of the plugin function. , but not limited to, the following:
