Aunt Liz: For Hispanic Americans, the “birthright citizenship” argument is especially harmful. They already worry about finding good jobs in a hard economy, and a sizeable portion of the population is getting educated or are professional career people who don’t want to be tied to an employer when they go on vacation. So you have people heading to the US who are looking for better, cheaper labor and who, if they’re illegal, won’t face heavy penalties. This is being sold to them as “American citizenship”, rather than any connection to the US, and you have the birthright argument working against them.
