I'm using Socket IO with Jest to test a simple and simple object. Every test has two tests: one uses the object to send a message, the second tests if the message was received. How can I use spyOn(object, methodName) to spy on the socket, so that it can be tested in an isolated environment? Here is my test: 'use strict' describe('myobject', () => { let myobject beforeEach(() => { myobject = new MyObject() }) it('should receive message', () => { socket.on('something', (message) => { expect(myobject.messageReceived(message)).toEqual(true) }) socket.emit('something', {from: 'localhost'}) }) it('should not receive message', () => { socket.on('something', (message) => { expect(myobject.messageReceived(message)).toEqual(false) }) socket.emit('something', {from: 'localhost'}) 6d1f23a050
