There was a problem submitting your request. A rotational-mode based streaming circuit for compression of video signals in an MPEG-2-video stream. A rotational-mode based streaming circuit (RMSC) was designed, implemented and tested to compress video signals in an MPEG-2-video stream. The RMSC uses a time-division multiplexed scheme for video compression. Different compression modes, including normal, high, super high and high-noise super high, were designed to reduce the computational load without affecting the visual quality of the output video signal. The circuit enabled its implementation in a VLSI system and yielded efficient and yet reasonable compression performance without requiring a significantly large increase in hardware and power requirements. This article also covers the system design and implementation of the reference decoder, which is required for the quantization function of the system, and two proposed video coding schemes. Earth's Average Temperature Gaining Momentum Again - walterbell ===== kthejoker2 There is another article in the link posted that put the number in context: earth-... ----- matthewowen As someone who lives on the climate continent, I know we're not immune to the effect of extreme weather and so I'm very nervous about the pace of the change. I want to do something to slow it down, but I don't know what that would even be. ----- cletus Hopefully someone with first hand knowledge of the effects of recent weather c6a93da74d
