This efficiency in sucking of ambient air may be affected, for example, by the density, or otherwise the state, of the ambient air.

The efficiency of sucking ambient air may also be affected by the attenuation, for example by turbulence, of the ambient air resulting from the presence of the vehicle, and by its motion relative to the ambient air. In the case of a submarine, for instance, the performance of the submarine may be influenced by whether it is surfaced or submerged. Previously proposed techniques of influencing the density, or state, of the ambient air to enhance the efficiency at which a vehicle sucks ambient air for use as its respiratory source generally involve the use of some combination of one or more of the following methods: static gating, venting of a partial vacuum into the atmosphere, and varying the venting of a partial vacuum from the ambient air source of an air-breathing vehicle. Static gating is disclosed, for example, in German patent publication DE-B-28 43 470. The c6a93da74d
