Its a lot of work but it is worth it in the end. I already have a lot of work in the pipeline but Having been a long time help on forum, I will do my best to help you. I hope you like octane render. In the 1990s, Jackie Speier, a congresswoman from California, had a role in arguing for the prosecution of a former members of the House page program -- a volunteer program for underprivileged high school students -- who had taken Congressional pages in the 1980s. Congressional page programs were expensive. They paid for the education of students in an attempt to have them serve as unpaid, full-time aides to members of Congress for two years. In exchange for this service, members paid tuition fees at prestigious schools such as Thomas Jefferson High School for Science and Technology. Jackie Speier argued that those who took part in the program were like criminals. In her book, "Spying on America," Speier wrote of the case: "The most notable aspect of the case was that the pages, who were not only students, but also young women, were being held accountable. The more I researched the case, the more I learned about the politics and culture of that time. I came to believe that paying pages was criminal and that those involved should be held accountable." Speier said she saw that she and her fellow page "were treated like children whose lives were being snatched away by the political system. We were no longer teenagers -- we were forced to grow up in the face of this injustice. You could not be arrested for stealing a candy bar -- the retribution was at best expulsion, and at worst a more serious investigation by the United States House of Representatives -- but when there was a national scandal involving the pages, which turned out to be as big as the Watergate scandal, it was frightening to think of the powers that be who were in Washington and the young women who were working for them." Speier began as a page herself and did not object to its purpose when she was a student at San Jose State. However, as she became more involved in national politics and was invited to join the House Government Reform Committee, she began to see the page program as part of something more akin to child abuse. The public outrage over the scandal is part of a long tradition of page scandals. For example, the page scandal that engulfed the House of Representatives in the mid-1980s was discovered by Howard Kurtz, then a staff writer for The Washington Post. Kurtz c6a93da74d
