Spain is a country that has a high prevalence of hepatitis C infection. This is a simple diagnostic test to detect antibodies against the virus, and the quantification of viral RNA, besides being cheaper and more accessible, is an indicator of the viral replication. The results of several epidemiological studies show prevalence around 1-2% in adults, and a marked increase of prevalence in patients with certain risk factors. The high prevalence of infection shows the existence of large groups of subjects infected, with potential morbidity and mortality. The knowledge of the initial phases of infection and the best time to detect anti-HCV antibodies and viral RNA increase the effectiveness of diagnosing and preventing the complications of the disease.Q: How to submit a form to a servlet on jsp page and then update the content of the jsp page?
