Cedrat Flux v12.0..Â .Complicated colonization of the heart with Candida. One of the most frequent complications of endocarditis is the presence of intracardiac thrombus, with an estimated incidence of 14-61%. The authors describe three cases of Candida endocarditis in which formation of a mobile fungal thrombus occurred in the atrial appendage, the left atrial appendage, and the mitral valve. The diagnosis was made by echocardiography, transesophageal echocardiography, and endomyocardial biopsy. Candida albicans was found in all cases and proved to be causative agent of endocarditis. None of the patients were immunosuppressed. A review of the literature revealed that only 17 cases of fungal endocarditis associated with intracardiac thrombus formation have been reported to date.
