There are three types of files which need to be downloaded: Document group files are the files which are attached with the document. Binding files are the files which format the document. Background files are the files which are not attached with the document but must be present when a document is opened. Optionally, the background files can be included in the document group files. Depending on the task, a document can be uploaded to client's account or a document can be shared in a document library. If a document is uploaded, background files are included in the same package as document group files. The document group files can include the following files: .cls is used to format the document .acro is an alternative to inserting commands like \&#'7' or \'\'\'. These commands are used for inserting special characters like copyright sign or trademark sign, which are called copyright or trademark symbols, respectively.
